Dear Sisters and Brothers,

With 2000 years of the Church history behind us, the eschatological teaching of the New Testament causes difficulty for those of us attempting to adapt the text to modern life. We sometimes seem no more ready to deal with the eschatology of Jesus. Consequently, sermons on such as these parables often deal only with themes pertaining to stewardship.

Some focus on the “law of increase,” a form of positive thinking – thoughts and attitudes based on abundance and success attract and produce more abundance and success. Failure to use a gift/talent results in its loss. Such statements may be true, but this Parable of the Talents is not about positive thinking and use of abilities.

The theme of faithfulness must be brought directly into relation with Jesus’ teaching about the present and future kingdom as the themes of ‘watchfulness and prayerfulness’ are focused in the parable of ten bridesmaids. Knowledge of God’s reign and salvation brings with it added responsibility. To accept the kingdom and its salvation is to accept a trust. It enlists one as an agent on behalf of the kingdom, and all those so enlisted will be rewarded or judged in terms of their faithfulness to their task. Once again the theme of responsibility for action is emphasized in this parable.

The fact of the delay of the second coming of Jesus does not negate eschatological faith; instead it raised the question of faithlessness. We still live in the “now and not yet” of all New Testament eschatology (1 John 3:2). We know that God has acted decisively in Jesus’ life, death, and resurrection, and we still believe that one day God will attain ultimate victory and the issue is now we live in the in-between time. The parable is not telling us how to obtain salvation, but it is calling us to commitment to the one who truly is king and to faithfulness to his purposes.

Let us listen to the advice of St. Paul in the second reading: “we have the light of the gospel – the illumination of the true faith. If we continue to live in that light, to lead our lives under that illumination, death’s advent cannot be in the darkness. We shall be spiritually prepared for it.”

(Excerpts taken from Klyne R. Snodgrass: “Stories with Intent; A Comprehensive Guide to the Parables of Jesus.”)
